You can reach me at thomas.rebermark@siwi.org

14:13:37 From Johnson Onyibe : Many thanks, Thomas. Our experience in Nigeria shows that the partnerships focused on ecosystem improvement gain momentum when economic plants are integrated into the project. While the community are more receptive to the new approach using economic/food plants, the Public sector appears hesitant. In your work, did you encounter such public hesitations and how were they resolved?

14:16:26 From Gregory Johnson : There seems to be consistent engagement with institutions to implement the 14:18:43 From Thomas Rebermark, Stockholm International Water Institute to Hosts and panelists : Yes, Johnson. We have seen similar hesitancy from the public sector in many regions of our work. Whilst the community are more curious and willing to new approaches. Which is why it is so essential that community are stakeholders in our projects.

14:18:47 From Gregory Johnson : SDGs versus the inclusion of Parents as possible Bridge Builders to actually implement and evaluate the impact and outcomes. Without the voice and presence of Parents in the dialogue and applications, we don't know IF the perceived value and anticipated success is authentic.
